

From the beginning, I aced studies and attempted to be the best at scholastics, and my pastime was to sit near my dad for hours observing him doing his work as he was a stay-at-home Chartered Accountant, back then.

My childhood pastime inclined my interests towards my father's profession which resulted in the development of the curiosity about accounting, finance, economics, and business and to question as to how it works: a business; market; and a nation, prompting the why and what addresses inevitably. These questions were always a fascination as I would ever wish to dig deeper and get to know more about these areas and understand these factors, hence, landing up opting for Economics, Business Studies and Accounting since my grade 9, and there started my journey towards converting my potential energy, my passion, to the kinetic energy, a career I always dreamt about.

The United Kingdom is the perfect place for me to transform my potential to pursue a career which I care, being it the land of leadership, business, transformation and ideas. Education at the UK will offer a plethora of opportunities to the International Students, and I will get the chance to curate myself well-rounded and develop the quintessential ingredients to my passion: analytical and problem-solving abilities; organisational skills; and most importantly the ability to adapt with the ever-growing world and globalisation. The British Education is exemplified as the model to the advanced education system owing to its enduring academic legacy which is a magnet to the students in India, be it Mr M.K. Gandhi or Mr Dabhi Tata.

Inspired by a teacher in grade 9, I ventured into blogging and before entering grade 11, I decided to reflect my interests through blogging and name my second blog on my school's nickname, The Commerce Insider. Evident in my articles, I opt to write mostly about the numbers, whether it be the widening trade deficit, the goods and services tax, the forex, Google India's sales turnover and more.

It is unquestionable that co-scholastics had a significant impact on my life, for I started my grade 11. From proposing the principal to organise the Model UN event to the closing ceremony of the event, I had gained self-confidence and identified the potential I had, apart from my academic records.

My organisational and teamworking abilities, financial management efficiency, leadership skills and literary proficiency was set to test when I was given a chance to curate a TEDx event after a successful gig, working on magnifying and employing my life-skills, concluding the event with a surplus to be allocated to a social cause. I was delighted to connect with an NGO, Youth Campus, which aims to develop life-skills and morals values in rural children facilitating them to read, explore and learn. We were fortunate to adopt a village, visit it on the weekends, and conduct our lessons. The instinct to do more for my area lead me to co-found the city's first independent Model UN conference and educate the youth about international relations, diplomacy, teamwork, and fundamental life-skills that are key to one's success.

Owing to my leadership skills and teamworking abilities I developed, I was sworn in as the house captain in the student council. My literary, presentation, teamworking and time-management abilities have been enhanced upon further by editing my school's magazine in less than two weeks, and I also was fortunate to be the TED-Ed Club Leader in my school. In the summers of 2017, I was glad to intern with a Chartered Accountancy firm which helped me enhance my learning experience, understanding the nuances of real-life complexities and dynamics and integrating the classroom learning about accounting and finance to the real life.

Accounting and Finance is that course which will incorporate problem-solving and decision-making abilities, I percieve and developed in my IB Diploma Programme. Accounts and finance department is the soul to any business organisation and it leads the business to changes and improvements, by coordinating with the other departments in the business. It is important for an executive to have sufficient knowledge about Finance and Accounting because capital is the driving force for any business, unquestionably.

Institutions at the UK aim to hone the essential life-skills as well as ensure the academic proficiency transforming the students to face the dynamic business habitat, and adapt to the demanding era. The offered career opportunities are exclusive and assistive for me to the fiercely competitive market. The schools at the UK will root me to the world-class professors, who are the perfect mentors and mirrors to discover the real potential and channelise it to pursuing the dreams. The learnings I will receive will equip me to expand my father's business, and the broad curricula will back me to professional training and expertise at work. These are just a few among the different determinants which established in me the passion in me to be a member of the distinguished academic heritage.
